ARE YOU A DENTAL RETREAD?
Adjusting to Dentures Key to Problem, says Dr. Campbell

Dental science has done wonders to make denture wearing easier than formerly. However, as good as dentures are today, they are still substitutes. But a denture wearer can make his denture problem a lot less difficult by following suggestions.

"First, you need to realize that nothing a man makes, as a substitute for a body part, is as good as what nature provided", Dr. Campbell said. "This is true of artificial limbs, plastic eyes, toupees, as well as teeth. You can condition yourself to the shock of loss of teeth by adjusting yourself to the idea that dentures are good substitutes. A comforting thought is that dentures are better substitutes than most other artificial things for the body".

DR. K.E. CAMPBELL
DENTIST

MY JOB IN HELPING YOU TO ADJUST
After the final fitting of new dentures, you may find they need some minor adjustment. This is gladly done. In addition to this, detailed suggestions are given to help you adjust personally to this way of life—

EXPERIENCED DENTURE WEARERS
If you already wear dentures, you have learned to chew differently. The longer you wear dentures, the more accustomed to them you become. If you have followed your dentist's instructions, the chances are that others are not obviously conscious that you wear artificial teeth. But even if your dentures don't change, the human body does—your gums change.

"Just as some people hesitate to see a doctor for fear they'll find something wrong with them, so denture wearers often hesitate to see a dentist when they need changes in their dentures", Dr. Campbell said. "Your facial contour may change as a result of shrunken gums. Your ability to chew will change. You can guard against premature appearance of old age by having new dentures when you first need them."
